Espionage Act (1917)

During World War I, the Espionage Act detailed numerous offences that would be considered treasonous in the United States. Many Americans criticized the act as unconstitutional, and hundreds were arrested in the months that followed its passage, including such well-known figures as socialist Eugene Debs, anarchist Emma Goldman, African American leader A. Philip Randolph, and union leader “Big Bill” Haywood. In 1919 President Wilson appointed A. Mitchell Palmer as attorney general. Together with his special assistant, J. Edgar Hoover, Palmer launched what came to be known as the Red Scare, a reaction to fears of communism sparked by the Russian Revolution. Along with the 1918 Sedition Act, the Espionage Act—which is excerpted below—formed the basis for Hoover and Palmer’s surveillance and prosecution of suspected radicals.
